

Let's Talk Science: Making Science Education Exciting, Relevant and Rewarding. The Conference Board of Canada: 1-12.

Research Area:	Uncategorized	Year:	2001
Type of Publication:	Article	Keywords:	Let's Talk Science, science education, science literacy, outreach, life skills development, youth, educators, hands-on science
Authors:	Watt, D.
Journal:	The Conference Board of Canada
Number:	Case Study	Pages:	1-12

Note:

Let's Talk Science shows students and educators that science is everywhere - in homes, in schools, in the community, on the bus, and in the movies - and science literacy skills, life skills and knowledge can be transferred and applied whatever the context. Let's Talk Science's approach to learning is one of intrigue, excitement and enjoyment: Let's Talk Science provides hands-on, minds-on collaborative learning opportunities and prides itself on knowing that its programs and activities are tested, validated and proven effective, through rigorous in-house and external research and evaluation procedures. Learn more about Let's Talk Science from this article: what Let's Talk Science does, activities and outreach, audiences, youth-focus, Partnership Program, research, advocacy, building life skills through science literacy, keys to success, finances and governance, staffing and volunteers, challenges, and achievements

Abstract:

Let's Talk Science (LTS) is a national charitable organization that is striving to improve scientific literacy through innovative educational programs, research and advocacy. LTS exists to motivate and empower young Canadians through science education.